

Current Issue

Home > News

- Blooming Nursery Is Saving With Solar
- Iwasaki Brothers Is Energized And Dollar Wise
- What Are Growers Doing About Sustainability?
- Inviting Buyers Into Your Greenhouse

- Download: Poinsettia Season Recap Whitepaper
- Iwasaki Brothers Slideshow
- Poinsettia Variety Favorites Of 2010
- Field Trials 2010: Year Of The Gomphrena
- Top 100 Growers: The List

- Poinsettia Season 2010 Recap: Making The Most Of Poinsettias
- Blooms Of Bressingham's 'Sweet Joanne' and 'Prairie Twilight'
- Armitage: Three Gardening Dilemmas

California Alliance Aiming To Eliminate Invasives

December 9, 2010

Send Share Print Text Size: A A A

PlantRight, an alliance of California nurseries, retailers and others that's on a mission to stop the spread of invasive plants through horticulture, is inviting leaders of California's greenhouse and nursery industry to help develop a program that certifies ornamental plants as invasive free.

PlantRight's goals are to prevent damaging and costly introductions of invasive plants across California. Additionally, a program could also help the industry tap into the growing sustainability market by attracting a growing number of consumers seeking beautiful, environmentally friendly ornamentals for their gardens.

Those who participate in the program will join a panel of nursery experts in an attempt to accomplish the following:

- Develop design standards for testing the invasiveness of new plant varieties
- Develop the framework for a certification program
- Explore market-based incentives, such as labeling programs for screened plants, to build awareness and consumer interest in non-invasive plants
- Develop a process for how information about new invasive plants will be shared among members of the state's nursery industry to prevent the accidental growing or selling of known invasives

The nursery industry has introduced thousands of ornamental plants to California, but about 1 percent of them have become invasive, according to PlantRight. Invasives destroy productive agricultural lands, consume valuable water, increase wildfires and flooding, and damage sensitive California habitats. PlantRight intends to ensure nurseries and arboreta are developing new, attractive ornamentals for California that won't behave like weeds.

Learn more about PlantRight at PlantRight.org. To participate in the program or learn more about it, contact Christiana Conser, program manager, at 415-977-0380 x312. Or, e-mail Conser at cconser@suscon.org.

Related Articles:

- Helenium 'Mardi Gras' From Blooms Of Bressingham
- 'Blonde Ambition' Ornamental Grass From High Country Gardens
- Download: 2010 Poinsettia Season Recap
- Poinsettia Season 2010 Recap: Making The Most Of Poinsettias
- Blooms Of Bressingham's 'Sweet Joanne' and 'Prairie Twilight'

